A huge well done to everyone for achieving an overall attendance of 97%, this is absolutely fantastic. Now we know we can achieve 97% we have to ensure we maintain it. Almost all classes achieved an attendance above the national average which is great.

The star class was Jordan, who achieved a perfect attendance of 100% and what an outstanding example they are setting to the rest of the school.

Hopefully, many of you will be taking part in our walk to school week next week, remember to set off earlier so your arrive to school on time (8.45am).

Tomato curry with coconut rice

Not being a vegetarian, I have a rather indelicate lack of faith in meatless main courses; I worry all too readily about whether it's going to be filling enough. I suppose this is habit, which in turn is largely cultural conditioning but, beyond that even, my fear is to do with balance: I need to feel sure that everything on the table provides a true marriage of tastes and textures; I can't abide the one-note meal. Here I'm happy: the acid brightness of the tomatoes is met with the sweetness of peas and the rich creaminess of the coconut rice, which is itself pricked with the sharpness of lime, while its Carrara-whiteness is punctuated by the gritty blackness of the seeds (not there just to satisfy culinary egomania).

Serves 4, as a main course with the coconut rice that follows.

2 x 15ml tablespoons cold-pressed rapeseed oil (see Kitchen Confidential p.16) or regular olive oil	4 cloves garlic, peeled and chopped
2 large onions (approx. 350g total), peeled and chopped	1kg cherry tomatoes, halved
1 teaspoon sea salt flakes or ½ teaspoon pouring salt	2 teaspoons turmeric
	1 teaspoon English mustard powder
	1 teaspoon hot chilli powder
	1 teaspoon garam masala
	200g frozen peas

♥ Heat the oil in a wide casserole or pan that comes with a lid, and add the chopped onions, sprinkling with salt, and stirring frequently as you cook them over a low to medium heat for about 7 minutes.

♥ Stir in the chopped garlic, then add the halved tomatoes, before stirring in the spices, and cook for 20 minutes with the lid on over a low heat.

♥ Cook the peas in another pan (in boiling salted water as usual), drain and add to the tomato curry for the last 5 minutes' cooking time. By all means cook the peas directly in the tomato curry, but be prepared then to sacrifice both the vivid red of the tomatoes and the bright green of the peas.
